About the Music - - -

This Spanish march was written in the summer of 1972 in Antonito, Colorado, on the banks of the Conejos River where the composer was camping with his wife and father, D.O. Wiley, former director of Bands at Texas Tech University. The introduction and first two strains follow the usual pasodoble pattern, both melodically and harmonically, including the usual countermelodies in the high baritones and a liberal use of tasteful, subtle temporary modulations through secondary dominant seventh chords. In the trio, however, a Neopolitan flavor is added through the use of wide upward skips in the melody, enhanced by the rich sonority of the low flutes, English horn and French horns. A short chorale near the end of the trio leads to a brilliant fanfare coupled with the low brass figures of Spanish flavor used in the introduction and at the conclusion of the second strain.

The tempo of the pasodoble should be between 108 - 120. The articulation used in the sixteenth note figures in the low brass and woodwinds are merely suggestions, and may be changed, slurs added or deleted, to fit the ability of the players. Although care should be taken to observe the dynamics, care should also be taken not to overdo crescendos. Use of the English horn and French horn on the trio is for color and is optional. If the 1st cornet drops his part an octave, as is optional on the part, then the 2nd and 3rd cornets should do likewise. Care should be taken that the percussion parts stay a little beneath the general dynamic level of the band. Horn cues in the saxophones should be kept beneath the dynamic level of the horns.
